

Making Great Managers

Do you worry about how to motivate your team?
Do you wonder if managing better could drastically impact your profits and productivity? How do great managers do it?

Improve confidence in managing and motivating teams

The Making Great Managers seminar is designed to provide attendees with a system and the skills necessary to create a culture of supportive accountability and team alignment around a clear vision.

Who will benefit most?

Anyone with a supervisory or management role will gain new skills. Those who are looking for a proven methodology for performance management will benefit the most. Alliant Leadership can customize the seminar for in-house training for any group size.

Training that managers will use immediately

This interactive seminar teaches managers how to implement a proven performance management framework with numerous exercises and resources to take back to the office. It is broken into four sessions:

- The 12 Questions That Great Managers Ask
- Performance Evaluation and Planning
- Setting S.M.A.R.T. Goals
- Coaching For Performance

Management expertise built from experience

Joe Denner, a professional coach and trainer, builds on his 15 plus years of mid-level and executive management experience. Joe's track record of building loyal and highly motivated teams is evidenced by his most recent team's 99% quality and 99% on-time delivery record.

One of the keys to this was his ability to create effective systems to manage his team which he shares in "Making Great Managers". His extensive experience in finance, accounting, operations and human resources brings a wealth of knowledge relating to the development of human capital for positive, profitable and sustainable growth.

"People are your most valuable asset. According to Jim Collins, author of the best-selling book "Good to Great", the "who" of your company is far more important than the "what." Investing in the skills of managers is a cost efficient way to improve company performance and the health of an organization's culture."
